A Message about Multiple Births RMA of Connecticut Continues to Focus on Patient Safety

In recent weeks, you may have heard about the woman in California who gave birth to octuplets. Based on published reports about this case, it appears that the mother did receive treatment at an undisclosed IVF center, though specific details about her medical care are limited.

Though this is an extreme example, the issue of multiple births and the standards used to protect patient safety are primary concerns for us at RMA of Connecticut. Our experienced medical team uses the safest and most effective treatment options to reduce the risk of multiple births while giving our patients the very best chance of achieving a pregnancy and having a healthy baby. Our standards meet or exceed the safety and procedural guidelines set by the American Society for Reproductive Medicine, and our record of success includes one of the lowest rates of multiple births in our industry.

We guarantee that we will continue to meet or exceed the highest possible safety standards in all areas of your treatment with us. If you have questions about any aspect of your treatment or the procedures that we use to reduce the risk of multiple births for our patients, the members of your RMA medical team will be happy to provide more detailed information at any time.
